

How do I measure my alarm activity against performance targets?

Whether you're an alarm management veteran or just getting started, it's a good idea to measure your alarm performance against some kind of target. You can establish the targets internally, hire a specialist to help you define alarm performance goals, or adopt any number of best-practice benchmarks. Regardless of the way you choose to establish your alarm performance goals, the LogMate TRAC module can trend your alarm activity against performance thresholds.

This ability can be used to establish baseline performance and then monitor and track ongoing improvement efforts. Capturing the history of performance improvement efforts can be good information to have available for audits and other plant related performance reviews. Easy and straightforward visualization of this information is a valuable tool for your management team.